

BUSINESS

Business means the state of buying or engaged in any work. Any kind of legal activities for the intention to earn profit is called business. The word 'Business' is come English words 'Busi+Ness' that means business is concentrated to all human activates with earning profit.

In general meaning, business is the process of production and purchasing as well as selling to earn profit. Business is related all kinds of legal works of producing, marketing and exchanging products and services with the intentions to earn profit.

From the functional point of view, the business is related to an equation that is to follows:

$$B = \sum \text{Industry} + \sum \text{Commerce} + \sum \text{Direct Service}$$

So business is the form of three types of works such as:

- To produce products and distributes service
- Purchasing and selling of products and services
- Related works of producing and marketing the products and services

ELEMENTS OF BUSINESS

Business may be defined as human activity directed towards producing or acquiring wealth through buying or selling goods for earning profit. Business has some elements which are essential for continue the organizational activities. The elements of business are as follows:

1. Capital: Capital is one of the important elements of business. No business can be continued except capital. Capital is needed to do any organizational activities. Business has two types of capital. To conduct daily activities, need current capital and to buy assets of business need permanent capital.
2. Organizational Institution: Organizational institute is very important element of business. Large or small whatever the expansion of business that must have the organizational institute and it may be partnership, joint stock, co-operative, national etc.

3. Specific location: A specific attractive location is to Human activity that provides create more value for the business. The businessman needs a specific place to conduct the business. This place may be a house or open place. The shape or place depends on the type of business and associated activities with the business.
4. Labor: Labor is involved with the conducting of business activities. To conduct the activities of business labor is essential. Some businesses need physical labor and some organizations need mental labor. In a sole proprietary business, the owners conduct the task as the owner as well as labor, sometimes in partnership business the partners work in the business but the joint stock company is continued by workers or labors.
5. Goods and service: Another important element of business is to produce goods and services and to distribute these to the ultimate consumers. Goods and services are the main elements of any organization. Each type of business is continued on the basis of goods and services whatever they produce or providing service.
6. Profit motive: Every organization must have the intention to earn profit. Without profit no organization can continue its operations smoothly. Sometimes profit may invest further to business organization.
7. Risk and Uncertainty: There is a proverb "No risk no gain" and the business is directed toward the achievement of several gains. So every business must have risk and uncertainty to be. successful. Every businessman can conduct business activities according to his own assumptions, if these assumptions are correct, he gets profit or he becomes successful otherwise cannot be successful in the business.
8. Transactions in terms of money: In the barter system there was no fixed medium of transaction but now there is a fixed media. So every transaction of business should be in terms of money. The transactions which are not considered in terms of money are not the business transaction.
9. Auxiliary Elements: Auxiliary elements are the supporting elements for conducting business successfully. To conduct the business property, it is needed some auxiliary elements. These auxiliary, elements are row materials, machinery, furniture, transportation, banking and insurance etc.

10. Validity: Validity is an important element of business. Every activity of the business organization should be valid in the eye of law. Any illegal activities are not considered as business though the business may be conducted to earn profit.

At last it can be said that, all these elements that are discussed above are essential for the organization. Without these elements the business organization cannot be existed. If anyone wants to prove the existence of the organization, he should observe the elements of the business.

NATURE OF BUSINESS

Business is influenced directly and indirectly by its environment. Business has certain rules-regulations and a specific ethical standard. However, there are many forms of business and economic activities are performed by sole traders. partnerships. incorporated companies and cooperatives. The few natures of business are as follows:

1. Economic activities: People always want to get more and more profit from the business. Man must work to satisfy these wants through the use of scarce resources of production, economic activities, therefore deal with the business of living and making a happy life. To make a meaningful living, every person involves with an occupation according to his capacity, capability and competency.
2. Profession: Profession is an occupation which renders specialized, expert and personal service. A lawyer, a doctor, a chartered accountant and an engineer render special services in respective field return of payment. For example, a doctor provides health care service by preventing illness from arising and by treating when it has 'arisen. Since a doctor or a lawyer or any other practitioner profession has to be an expert in his own special activity, he must possess the minimum academic and other qualifications prescribed by law.
3. Employment: In this type of activity a person undertakes to work for another according to the terms of a service agreement in return of salary or wage or even commission. A relation of boss (master) and subordinate (servant) is created under a contract of service and the servant acts under the control and supervision of his master and is bound to conform to all reasonable orders given to him in the course of his work.

4. Business Activities oriented: Accurately 'business' means busy ness or the state of being busy in any activity. A person may become busy in reading, writing, playing because any of these designated workplace, to facilitate activities may bring his money, prestige, power or the accomplishment of the any kind of satisfaction.

Business is any enterprise that makes distribution or provides any product or service which is needed to other members of the community who are able and willing to pay for. So. to fulfill various kinds of needs of people and to earn profit, goods and services are produced, distributed, purchased and sold. Naturally the business organization conducts those types of activities.

CHARACTERISTICS OF BUSINESS

Generally, business is divided into many types. It may be small, middle or large. Again it may be sole proprietorship, partnership, joint stock Company, co-operative, or national organization. Some organizations are involved in production and some are concerned for providing services. The term 'Business' possess the following characteristics:

1. Production or acquisition of goods: The main task of business is to provide goods and services to the people for a price. Sometimes the products to be produced by the business organization or acquire from the different source of production.
2. Economic activities: Basic characteristic of business is to involve with economic activities. Economic activities mean all the activities which are conducted to fulfill the needs of the human being. People have to provide assets, money, goods and services to satisfy their needs which fulfill these objectives.
3. Sale or transfer of title: Goods which are produced or procured for sale in return of price. This activity i.e. involved with the selling products or acquiring of wealth. Goods produced or acquired for personal consumption. it never be treated with the business. So through the business transaction title of the goods are transferred from sellers to customers.

4. Creation of utility: Another characteristic of business is creation of utility of various products and services. Through the industrial organization, business create utilities, through the business ownership utility, through the transportation place utility, through the insurance risk utility and through the banking money utility are created: Those are involved to fulfill the demand of consumers.
5. Dealings in goods and services: Business means dealing with goods and services. The goods may be consumer's goods such as cloth, bread, jams, shoes, watches etc, or producer's goods such as machinery and tools. Services consist of those items which are not stored by consumers, such as transport service.
6. Service motive: Earning profit is not the only objective of business. Social welfare is another important objective of business in this moment. To keep the existence of business and to create popularity businessmen now try to serve the society. For these reasons they try to sell their products in reasonable price and the quality must be kept. So now a day's service motive is a characteristic of business.
7. Regularity of dealings: Regularity and recurring nature of buying and selling which ensures continuity of transactions is a characteristic of business. A single transaction is involved with buying and selling does not become business. For. instance, if a person sells his motor car and makes profit. it is not a business. On the other hand, if he keeps a stock of cars and sells them to the customers is called business.
8. Uncertainty or risk about future: Business is an economic activity that focuses on the future, the future is always uncertain because of risk: Through the risk taking any businessman earns profit. The conduct of industry or business always involves a certain amount of risk and uncertainty.
9. Profits as reward for service rendered: Business is an activity which means to make livelihood or to earn profit. Making profit is an essential characteristic of business. Profit is the largest • stimulus for maintaining the continuity of business. In other words, profit is essential for survival and development. In fact, profit is in a sense, a reward for the individual ability or efficiency of the enterpriser and also for the service that he renders to the community.

10. Flexibility: Businesses are always changeable because the environment of business is changed time to time. So to adjust with the changing environment businessmen have to change the pattern of business. Since the demands of the consumers are changed, businessmen try to fulfill all the demands. So businessmen should follow flexible strategy to carry on the business.

11. Developing good relation: Good relation is one of the preconditions to be succeeded in business. Good relation between employees and employer is essential for the organization. As a result, both the organization and the customers become happy.

12. Forecasting: Forecasting is another important characteristics of business. Every business depends on the future and the future is always uncertain. So the demands of the customers of future are forecasted by the businessmen. If the forecasting is correct, the businessmen become successful in business.

At last we can say that, business is the part of economic activities of human beings that provide all kinds of goods and services to fulfill the demand of people. For this reason, business is treated as important occupation of the human civilization.

OBJECTIVES OF BUSINESS

Every human activity has some objectives and business has some important objectives as an economic activity. There is a common belief that 'a money making is the only objective of business. Maximization of profit is the prevailing norm among the businessmen themselves. Obviously a company must make profit for survival, but for survival it is also necessary to provide products or render services that customers want. themselves. Obviously a company must make profit for survival, but for survival it is also necessary to provide products or render services that customers want. Besides economic objectives, a business has social objectives. Various objectives of business are discussed with the chart in below:

- A. Economic Objectives: Business has economic objectives. Profit plays a vital role to measure efficiency and must be watched constantly. After all, profits not only provide accurate test of business efficiency but also ensure to check against features of business. The economic objectives are given below:
1. To earn profit: The main and primary objective of business is to earn profit. It is the economic objective. There is no business organization in the world without profit earning objective. If there is no chance to earn profit, nobody will involve in the business.
 2. To invest capital: Another objective of business is capital investment. Assets are increased by using deposited money. So businessmen collect all the scattered small deposits, and invest it in the business. As a result, proper utilization of money is certified and the economic activities are continued.
 3. To produce products: Another essential objective of every business is to produce goods and services. Thus business fulfills the demand of human needs. Business is established to fulfill the demand of human beings producing various goods and services.
 4. To utilize wealth properly: The proper utilization of wealth is defined by business. Natural wealth is collected from nature and by the formation it is made useable. These processes are done by the business. Business makes the product as usable for the customers.
 5. To create customers: Selling the product to the customer is another objective of business. Every organization search customers to sell their products. Advertisement and publicity is the main method which is used to create the customers. Customers are essential for the business.
 6. To use manpower properly: Manpower is the important element of business: Labor is used, to produce and distribute products and services. Business is always alert to utilize the manpower properly by keeping them busy in production of goods.
 7. To conduct research and innovate new product: Innovation of new product and the improvement of product are made by research and innovative activities. Every businessman tries to produce new product and services for the customers. This work is done through the research and the innovative activities-.

8. To keep stability and progress of business: The objective of every business is to ensure the existence and the consistent improvement. Profit earning motive is not only the objective but also it has the motive to improve and develop the organization for the existence in the market.

B. Social Objectives: A business has some social objectives. As such social objectives of business are described below:

1. To deliver services: The main social objective of business is to fulfill the demand and want by producing and delivering the products at reasonable price. Businessmen also maintain the quality of products and services is the social objective.
2. To create employment: Through the business new scope of employment are created. It is another social objective of business. Businesses employ many employees for producing and distributing the products. As a result, unemployed employees get the employment. It is necessary for both the organization and the employees.
3. To develop living standard: Another social objective of business is to develop the living standard of the people by producing and distributing their necessary products and services. As a result, their living standard is improved.
4. To maintain actual income- on investment: It is the social responsibilities of business to maintain the interest of the investors. Business ensures that the investors get proper interest. It is a social objective of business.
5. To abandon anti-social activities: Only profit earning is not the motive of business. Anti-social activities such as theft, black-marketing, syndicating etc. are not considered as business. Business is not involved with these types of illegal activities.
6. To participate in welfare activities: Business takes part in various welfare activities such as forestation, education, religious institution, hospital, library, roads, bridge etc.

C. Human Objectives: Business has some human objectives. These objectives are described below:

1. To do justice to labors: Human resource is one of the main elements of business. It has to ensure proper salary or wages for them. Businessmen should take care about their workers according to the rules regulations and humanity.
2. To pay the fair value of raw-material supplier: Every organization needs the raw materials for producing products. These raw materials, elements and services are provided by the suppliers. So the businessmen should pay sufficient payment to the suppliers.
3. To create human relations: Human relation is very important for all the organizations. Now-a-days business activities are made to create a good relation among the people of the various stages. Peoples of societies are involved with the business. Such as employees, raw materials suppliers, customers etc.

4. To create good atmosphere of work: Good working environment helps to increase productivity. So, to create good atmosphere of work is treated as an objective of human in business. Good atmosphere of work increases the job satisfaction of the workers.
5. To ensure stability of service: To get security is one kind of motivation of the employees. Businessmen try to give security of service to motivate them. As a result, productivity will be increased. So it is one of the human objectives of the business.
6. To take initiatives of workers' welfare: Workers welfare is the human objective of business. Businessmen always ensure a standard life for the employees and give some incentives for them. As a result, they are motivated and do more and more works.

D. National Objectives: Business has some objectives to contribute the nation, Such as improvement of the economic condition of the country, development of the agriculture and the industry, increasing production to remove the poverty, reducing unemployment, development of living conditions, distribution of income and assets etc. Business tries to achieve the objectives by keeping the national interest. Such objectives are given below:

1. To strengthen of economic structure: Strengthening the economic structure is one of the national objectives of 'business. Natural assets of the country and the manpower are used by the business to produce the goods and distribute services. So business plays a great role to strengthen the economic condition of the country.
2. To increase national income: Business activities are increased by production and distribution of goods and services. As a result, taxes are increased and national income is increased. National income. gross domestic product is also being increased.
3. To distribute income and wealth properly: Business ensures the proper distribution of income and wealth by its activities. It is a national objectives of business. Proper distribution of income and wealth whole nation will be benefited.
4. To remove unemployment problem: By increasing business organization employments are created. Unemployed workers get employment. Creation of new employment for the unemployed employees and removing unemployment problem is a national objective. It helps to develop and the improvement of country.
5. To protect the state: Business organizations strengthen the state by producing various protective products that play a great role to protect the people', such as-medicines. Through the business activities of organizations different protective products and services are imported for increasing living standard c people.
6. To be refrained from anti-national activities: Business organization is refrained from any type of anti-national activities. Because any illegal activity is not treated as business.

Other objectives: Business organization has some other objectives such as social achievement, to serve the people, to control the political issue of the country, to increase the recognition etc. Businessmen want to achieve these objectives which are important for the business and the country. Business enterprise which makes distributes or provides any product or service which is needed other members of the community. And business transactions are essentially measured in terms of money. But the only valid definition of business purpose is to create customers.

SCOPE OF BUSINESS

Business includes industry, commerce, trade, aids to commerce and direct services. These are also as classification of business.

A. Industry

Industry is concerned with the production of goods and commerce is involved with the distribution of produced products. It encompasses a transformation process in which inputs are converted into outputs. The process of extraction, production, conversation, processing and fabrication of products are described as industry. These products are sold either for further transformation into finished goods or for ultimate consumption. Goods used by final consumers are consumers' goods, and those used the products in the products center is called producers' goods.

According to Bangladesh Labour Law-2006, "Industry means any business, trade, service, employment occupation." In a broad sense, industry is characterised by the existence of the following:

- a) Employer and employee
- b) Works on the basis of wages
- c) Products or services to be produced
- d) Buying and selling of labor power
- e) Creation of utility

Therefore, an industry is a group of manufacturers or businesses that produce a particular kind of goods or services. It may be defined as any activity that creates utility.

Types of Industry

1. Primary Industry: The primary sector is concerned with the extraction of natural resources or raw materials from the earth. The economic operations of a primary sector are usually dependent on the nature of that particular place. These industries create products that will be sold or supplied to the general public. The primary industry is often the most important sector in emerging countries. A primary industry's economic operations revolve around using the planet's natural resources, such as vegetation, earth water, and minerals. Primary industry are two categories; such as-

- a) Extractive Industry: Extractive industries are engaged in supplying commodities which are extracted or raised from the earth, sea and air with comparatively small help of human being. This industry produces finite raw materials that cannot be replenished through cultivation. The products of such industries are generally used by manufacturing and construction industries for fabricating finished goods. Examples of extractive industries are fishing, mining, agriculture etc.
- b) Genetic Industry: The genetic sector encompasses the development of raw materials that can be improved via human involvement in the manufacturing process. Genetic industries are industries which dependent upon nature, require a greater application of human skill in their production. The enterprises engaged in agriculture fisheries, forestry, & livestock management are examples of genetic industries. Through agriculture is dependent upon the nature and quality of soil and climatic condition, yet in this line will very much depended upon the application of human skill and knowledge. For example, poultry farm, fishing farm, agriculture farm.

2. Secondary Industry: After primary industries have accumulated raw materials, secondary industries enter into the picture. The construction and manufacturing industries are primarily included in the secondary industry. The transition of raw materials into finished items is part of the secondary sector. For example, wood is used to make furniture, steel is used to make automobiles, and textiles are used to make clothing.

In order to manufacture products that will be marketed to the general public, secondary industries frequently use massive machinery in production plants. Even human power can be employed to package these items for distribution to retailers and other locations.

- a) Manufacturing Industry: These industries are concerned with the working of raw materials or semi-finished materials into finished products. That means material is converted into semi-finished or finished products. For example; steel mills, spinning and weaving mills, textile mills, sugar mills etc. Manufacturing processes are carried in the factory and constitute a very large part of the total business activities.
- b) Service Industries: Service industries are involved with providing of professionals. For example; lawyers, doctors, teachers etc.
- c) Construction Industries: Construction industries are concerned with making or constructing of buildings, bridges, dams, roads, canals etc. The process layout, fitting and connecting materials which have already been prepared are involved in these industries. Classifications of manufacturing industries are as follows:

- a. Continuous Industry: Continuous industry is an industry in which all the materials are received at one point, from which successive operations turn it into finished products. Example of continuous industries are yarn spinning, paper and ceramic manufacturing.
- b. Synthetically industry: Synthetically industries are the type of industries of various ingredients which are brought together and combined in the manufacturing process to produce a new product. Paper manufacturing, yarn spinning, paint making and soap making are the examples of Synthetically industries.
- c. Analytical Industry: In analytical industry, the basic material is analyzed and separated into several parts so that the final product can be separately and distinctive from the mass of original material. All refining industries, such as oil and by products of coke of this nature.
- d. Assembly Industry: In an assembly industry, the finished product can be produced only after various components have been made and then brought together for final operations, such as manufacture of shoes and automobiles.
- e. Assembly Industries with similar components: In similar components of assembly industries, the components are similar and similar operations, as in garments industry.
- f. Assembly Industries with dissimilar components: In dissimilar components of assembly industries, the components are dissimilar and assemble the components from the various sources are known as assembly industry with dissimilar components.

B. Commerce

Commerce is the process of buying and selling and all those activities which facilitate trade, such as storing, grading, packaging, financing, insuring, transporting etc. The principal function of commerce is to remove the hindrances of person, place, time, exchange and knowledge in connection with the distribution of commodities until they reach to the consumers. By removing these hindrances commerce ensures a free and smooth flow of goods from producers to consumers. The hindrances referred to above are discussed below:

1. Hindrance of Persons: Buyers and sellers of products are not always situated at the same place. So, the contact between them is difficult for distance. Commerce helps to remove this hindrance or difficulties between persons by means of trade. Trade is as a part of commerce therefore plays a major role in establishing contact between the producers and sellers of their products and the consumers and sellers of those goods to satisfy their wants.
2. Hindrances of place: The goods may be produced at one place and the demand for these products may be the greatest at different places, because they are not produce their products. This barrier of distance is removed by commerce through the different means of transportation and goods are carried, from one place to another.
3. Hindrance of time: Goods, especially in modern times, are produced on anticipation of demand. They must be stored in a safety place to be released as and when demanded. The function of storing and preservation is performed by warehouses. Warehouse removes the hindrances of time by balancing the time gap between production and consumption and so it creates time utility.
4. Hindrances of exchange: Money is the medium of exchange, payment for goods and services such as the banks. In this way, banks as part of commerce, act to remove the hindrances of exchange and enable buyers to procure goods, especially by extending their own credit.
5. Hindrances of Information; Selling products is the most important problem that a manufacture has to solve. His products may be the best but how the prospective buyers will know about them. Advertising and salesmanship help to remove the hindrances of the lack of information by bringing the notice of the people the advantages of buying the goods and services offered.

C. Trade

Trade is the fundamental state of business activity it includes sale and purchase of the goods or services. it involves the exchange or transfer of goods or services. The producers build the goods, then it transfers to the whole seller, then to a retailer and finally reached to the consumer.

So, trade is the final state of business activities and involves sale and purchase of products for money or money's worth. It is facilitating the transfer of goods from the seller to the buyer that all the others activities are undertaken.

1. Internal Trade: Internal trade is also known as home trade or domestic trade which comprised buying and selling of goods within the national boundary of a country. All transactions connected with it, such as payment and transporting are national, and no external agency is involved.
1. Foreign or International Trade: Foreign or international trade refers to buying goods from or selling commodities to foreign countries. This type of trade involves payment for goods in the currency of the country of the supplier of goods or international currency and the use of international means of transport.
2. Wholesale Trade: Wholesale trade relates to the purchase of goods in large quantities from procedures and the growers and their resale to retailers in small lots. It serves as a link between the manufacturers or the procedures and the retailers who sell them to the ultimate consumers.
3. Retail Trade: Retail trade is the last link in the economic chain where human wants to purchase the products and get satisfaction. The retailer assembles various types of products from numerous sources at a convenient place and supplies in small quantities to the consumers.

D. Aid of Commerce and industry: Some aids which are related to the industry and the commerce such as research of products and services and market activities of the development of selling etc. are included in the scope of business.

E. Direct Service: Business provides not only goods but also services, at every point in the economic systems an infinite variety of services are furnished such as domestic services, financial and aesthetic services to individuals and to business enterprises. When a person goes to a cinema, or takes out an insurance policy on his life, he receives nothing material in return of his money but a piece of paper. A cinema hall or an insurance company is a business concern. Hotels provide accommodation, railways and airplanes means of getting from one place to another. All of them provide services customers, clients or subscribers.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN BUSINESS, COMMERCE AND TRADE

Sl. No.	Particulars	Business	Commerce	Trade
01.	Meaning	Business refers to all those activities which are done with the aim of earning profits.	Commerce refers to all activities which facilitates the exchange of goods from producer to end consumer.	Trade refers to exchange of products or services among buyers and sellers in return for money.
02.	Scope	Wider. It includes both trade and commerce within its activities.	Wider than trade, as it comprises of activities which supports trade.	Narrower as is concerned with only buying and selling of goods.
03.	Connectivity	Between owner and clients.	Between producer and consumer.	Between buyer and seller.
04.	Capital needed	Huge amount of capital is needed.	Requires less capital.	More amount of capital needed.
05.	Side represented	Supply side of the product.	Only demand side.	Both demand and supply side.

PREREQUISITES OF A SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS

In order to be a successful or to avoid failure, a businessman, must render a worthwhile service or make a quality product that can be sold at a profit consistently and continuously. To do this a business organization must confirm the following requisites of success in business:

1. Company objectives: The most important and fundamental necessity of a successful business is the establishment of definite and clear objectives. Without fixed purpose no organization can conduct the effectively and efficiently. To avoid failure, both long range and short range objectives should be established

2. Planning: Planning is another important requisite of a successful business organization. Planning always think about the future courses of actions. Planning is the analysis of a problem, thinking out the forward solutions of that problem and then outlining the steps that must be taken to reach the predetermined objectives. Planning is proposing a forward programmed for guiding tile future affairs of an enterprise. Planning assumes that the future will be different from the present and it attempts to determine how the enterprise can make use of that difference.
3. Good relation between employers and employees: The success of a business organization depends on the good relation of the employers-employees. If there is existing good relation among the employers and the employees, then both parties are facilities and b rapidly. As a result, business organization can achieve the goals of the organization.
4. Materials research: Material research is another requisite of the success of the business organization. Material research is linked with product development. For example, research of metals. coal, oil and chemicals has played a big part in recent times in bringing forth new alloys, synthetic rubbers, plastics, resins, fibers etc.
5. Equipment and process development: The equipment and development of the process is usually directed towards the development of the methods of manufacture. tools, and equipment as well as handling devices that tend to increase productivity.
6. Smooth distribution: The proper distribution system of a business is essential for existing and smooth running of business. Distribution is necessary to deliver the goods and the services to the actual customers. For this reason, smooth, sequential and proper distribution system is needed for developing the business.
7. Structural sound organization: For the success of any business enterprise it is essential to establish well defined organization, formal structure with competent personnel whose duties are surrounded. Everyone should understand their duties and responsibilities and they can act according to their assigned duties and responsibilities.
8. Adequate finance: Finance is said to be the life blood of a business enterprise. It is true that the success of any business organization depends on adequate long-term and short term finance.

9. Risk bearing capacity: Every business has some risks. There is a proverb "no risks no. gain". So. every businessman has to bear the risk, businessman should achieve the risk bearing capacity to escape the business from the future uncertainty and to conduct the businesses properly.
10. Attractive location: Attractive and proper location of the firms or business organizations are essential prerequisites for a successful business organization. The proper automation of office layout and size also contribute substantially to the success of a business organization. If the businessmen are not able to select the best location for the business organization, they cannot achieve the objectives perfectly.
11. Effective and efficient management: Effective and efficient; management is probably the most important requisite of a successful business. Because through the Management the economic forces are utilized properly and the business organization can have achieved predetermined objectives. It is necessary that the success of enterprise is depends on intelligent and enlightened executives or managers.

All these essentials of a successful business are important for the business organization. The success of a business enterprise depends on ability to buy right, to manufacture correctly, to keep costs down, to sell, to keep records, to preserve resources and to get along with others will go a long way to make a business successful.